

LITERARY NOTES.

Mr. W. D. Howells's collection of essays on "Modern Italian Poets" will be published this week by the Harpers.

"A Palace in the Garden" is the title of Mrs. Molesworth's story for this year. There are few books for children as refined and entertaining as are this Englishwoman's.

A steel portrait of Charles Lamb hitherto unpublished will be prefixed to Mr. Alger's edition of Lamb's "Letters" now in the press of A. C. Armstrong & Son.

R. L. Stevenson's "Familial Studies of Men and Books" will be brought out by Dodd, Mead & Co.

James C. Dilke, of Edinburgh, a great-grandson of the author of "Tom Bowley," and a grand-nephew of the bibliographer, is about to bring out a book which will interest all collectors of the literature of Scotland. This is a volume of "Annals of the Edinburgh Stage, With an Account of the Rise and Progress of Dramatic Writing in Scotland." Only 500 copies will be printed.

The thirtieth edition of Mrs. Burnett's charming story, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," is now in the press.

Madame Ristori's "Memoirs" are just leaving the press. She gives therein an interesting account of her early experiences on the boards. She made her debut at the unusually tender age of three months and played her part very handily, as it happened. All she had to do was to keep quiet; but she screamed so lustily the whole time she was on the stage that the curtain had to be lowered before its time to spare the audience the further infliction of this novel species of "gag."

Some three years afterward she made her first conscious appearance on the boards, and did no better. The villain of the piece, who was to kidnap her, looked so pitifully vainous in his stage makeup that the child set up a terrible howl, and ran off the stage screaming for her mother. She was nearly five when she next presented herself before the footlights, and this time she scored a success. She only fourteens, though she looked much older, she tells us, when she essayed her first great tragic role—that of the heroine in Silvio Pellico's "Francesca da Rimini"—and won her first triumph in the genre in which she was destined to achieve so brilliant a reputation.

Mr. C. F. Adams, the creator of that kindly old Dutchman, the father of "Leddie Yawob Strauss," has a book in the Harper press—a volume of "Dialect Ballads."

Various memoranda of Charles Dickens have been brought together by Mr. Kitton in the search he has instituted after portraits for his forthcoming book "Dickens Portrayed by Pen and Pencil." Prominent among these is a miniature on ivory, painted by Miss Drummond in the "Wicklow" series, as an engagement gift from Dickens to his future wife, Miss Hogarth. Then there is a painting by Augustus L. Egg, R.A., as of the novelist as Sir Charles Coldebrand; as well as E. M. Ward, R.A.'s picture of him in his study at Tavistock House, and the bust by Mr. Wooller. Also is the death-mask. There is also the sketch by Mr. George Augustus Sala, done in 1849 for the frontispiece to the extremely rare novel entitled "The Battle of London Life; or, Hot and Bitter." Its Secretary," by Morna.

It has occupied fifteen months of Mr. Will H. Low's stay in Italy to prepare his drawings for the Lippincott's forthcoming edition of Keats' "Odes and Sonnets."
